WINNIPEG

WINNIPEG, the Chicago of Canada, stands among the four or five most progressive cities on the continent. Its population has doubled in the last four or five years, and now numbers 90,000 of the most active and progressive people in America. Thirty-five years ago Winnipeg was naught but a Hudson Bay post, known as Fort Garry, and its sole business was to engage in the fur trade of the great West. Now it is the centre of nearly a dozen railways traversing the fertile wheat fields of Manitoba and the North-West Territories and Provinces. It is growing with wonderful rapidity, and with the increased development of the West the outlook is that its population will double again in the next five to ten years. Winnipeg began to grow when the Canadian Pacific Railway was completed in 1885. Last year over 110,000,000 bushels of grain were produced on the prairies, and the total elevator capacity amounted to nearly 46,000,000 bushels. Winnipeg is situated on the Red River, which was the artery of commerce in the old days, the hardy voyageurs paddling down to Fort Garry from the hunting grounds of the far North and West. Main Street, Winnipeg, is a broad and magnificent thoroughfare. Portage Avenue is another important business street, and has been growing more in importance particularly of late. Among the finer public buildings of Winnipeg are the City Hall, Parliament Buildings, Union Bank, Canadian Pacific Railway Depot, Merchants Bank, Post Office, Canadian Bank of Commerce, Dominion Bank, McIntyre Block, Carnegie Public Library, Wesley College, Manitoba University, Manitoba College, St. John's College.
